

Universal Language

There is a certain grace that falls between my brain and notes coming from the unsaid love is in that orchestra.

The notes are like a message from the composer's soul of God.

God is in your heart and when you're moved by the song with no vocals it's a different kind of feeling.

Those are hugs from that ancestor that came before you or message from God about how pure the world can be.

The same feeling of love I got when I'm greeted by passed souls in my sleep.

I asked "Why me?" and he said, "because you have the gift"

It can express how a person felt during their time of sorrows and how they still wished for the world around them to be happy.

Such as "Ode to joy, I could have done more."

The notes can express the grace in someone's spirit dancing with their soulmate from afar or near.

I often wonder if classical music could heal all even if you don't know a lick of English.

Hurt people hurt people so would mend the hearts of them to create a unified world.

People of all shapes and colors singing one choir to all the instruments and the audience of many.

SO it would help to mend all sides

Mame Diarra AbdurRahman